Black Mantilla"—Released June 12.

Arbois is a small French town, near the edge of the Jura Mountains on the Swiss frontier. We see some of its streets and the market place where the market is held on certain days of the week. The inhabitants make good use of the Cuissance River which flows through the town. Arbois is the boyhood home of the famous biologist, Louis Pasteur, the discoverer of the treatment named for him. The monument erected to his memory is seen.
